Note on the cover image

The cover image is Funtumfunafu, an Adinkra symbol from Ghana. It has been variously defined as “a need for unity particularly where there is one destiny” and “democracy and oneness despite cultural differences.” The image itself is borrowed with appreciation from Cornell University Library, <http://www.library.cornell.edu/africana/>

Introduction

This is a descriptive study of Africana Studies programs in the state of New York. Our findings are based on institutional information posted on campus Web sites during the academic years 2004/2005 and 2005/2006. It is the first report of a national study that will include every degree-granting program in Africana Studies in the entire United States. Future work will focus on various regions of the world.

This study will refer interchangeably to Black Studies and Africana Studies as the academic field that examines any or all people of African descent. Black Studies was the name used when the field originated, and, as the data here indicates, Africana Studies has become the consensus.

This is a draft report to be revised and finalized by September 2006. We need your help in correcting our data and guiding our analysis with your knowledge and understanding.

Need for this study

There is a great need for reliable data on Africana Studies as an academic profession within institutions of higher education as formal degree-granting units. This does not include all of the institutions that offer courses dealing with Africana Studies, because this report is limited to a study of degree-granting academic programs. The impetus for this study arises from several specific important needs:

- 1) There are over 500 degree-granting programs in the United States. Some have been in existence for more than 35 years. This national and professional community can be self-governing only to the extent that it can be conscious of its actual existence, and in turn is able to set goals and standards in order to improve academic achievement and foster greater societal impact.
- 2) Today there are seven PhD and over 30 MA programs in Africana Studies. The kind of data presented in this report is essential for structuring a job market that can utilize the skills of the more than 600 graduate students currently in Africana Studies programs.
- 3) The faculty and administrators of Africana Studies are in need of reliable data in order to compare this field with others and be in a position to compete within the campus in general and a college in particular. This requires the ability to compare achievement and efficiency with other fields in the era of attracting budgets and changing priorities. In addition, faculty and administrators in Africana Studies need to become aware of their fellow institutions so that resources can be shared profitably, especially in the areas of targeting faculty, skills, and curriculum materials.

4) There is need to report data on the diverse and dynamic growth and development of Africana Studies as an academic discipline to encourage new investment and support from everyone. This not only includes the campus structures of legitimacy and funding, but sources in society and the community at large as well.

5) The community deserves transparency, giving everyone structured accountability. The community has supported, and often led, struggles to create our programs so it seems reasonable to report on our situation as freely and openly as possible to our primary support base, the community.

This report is part of a general research program on the state of Black Studies as an academic discipline throughout the entire United States. This first interim report covers the state of New York. Our second report (on California) will soon follow.

The top ten states with the most institutions granting degrees in Black Studies by region are in table 1 below.

East	Midwest	South	West
New York	Ohio	Florida	California
Massachusetts	Illinois	Virginia
Pennsylvania	Michigan	Alabama

Table 1. States with largest number of institutions granting degrees in Africana Studies

The new age of information technology has greatly facilitated this study as the collection of self-reported data via the World Wide Web can be done quickly and at little cost. Furthermore, the study was carried out by first-generation undergraduate students enrolled in the University of Toledo’s Africana Studies Program. We have a student work process that we call “becoming a spider.” A spider is a student or community activist working as a cyber organizer using the tools of information technology for research and community organizing. In this case they have been employed via the Federal Work Study Program by which they can get paid for up to 20 hours a week of doing research and community service. This is a contemporary example of a program comparable to the WPA employment of intellectuals and artists and provides a vital resource for service learning in Africana Studies.

This research report is not an example of carrying out a research project based upon external funding for research, but reflects the reorganizing of curriculum development to incorporate research as an active part of normal student and faculty activities.

Method

Our general approach to this study is based on the D-6 method of research designed as part of the transition from Black Studies to eBlack Studies. This name change indicates that information technology is central to the new paradigm for the field. As the chart indicates, the D-6 method stands for Definition of the Research Problem, Data Collection, Digitization, Discovery, Design, and Dissemination.

D1. Definition	Defining the problem, summing up the relevant literature, and formulating the research question and/or hypothesis
D2. Data collection	Operationalizing the variables, drawing a population sample, and collecting data regarding the variables
D3. Digitization	Inputting, scanning, otherwise putting the data on computer, organized in a useful way
D4. Discovery	Analyzing the data to test the hypothesis or answer the research question
D5. Design	Presenting the data and analysis in text, tables, and figures in order to convey the findings to various audiences
D6. Dissemination	Sharing the findings with the various audiences as widely and effectively as possible

Table 2. The D-6 method

D1: Definition

Our basic question is “What is Black Studies?” Our definition of the problem is simply the need to describe the basic features of academic degree programs that focus on the Black experience. The problem is that no one has constructed a solid empirical database on Black Studies. Our discourse has been ideological. This has been a focus in the field for some time, although there has never been an empirical data set that has been constructed for general use by scholars in the field. Our solution is not only to gather and report some basic data, but also to make it available to the research community for repeated use. In addition, we hope that this data set will be enhanced and expanded by subsequent research so that we can have adequate trend data for a more rigorous study of the history of the field.

D2: Data collection

Our New York data collection began with the list of postsecondary educational institutions provided online by the Board of Regents. A survey of the Web sites of these institutions was done to find which ones offered degrees focusing on the Black experience—Africa, African Americans, and the entire African Diaspora. Once these were identified we had to conduct several additional searches to complete our data collection:

1. We downloaded and printed the Web site of the academic program.
2. We downloaded and printed every course listed as part of the curriculum of the program.
3. We identified every faculty member and did an Internet search for background information.
4. We used the Census Bureau Web site to find socioeconomic and demographic information about the communities in which the academic institutions were located (www.census.gov).
5. We obtained data from the Chronicle of Higher Education Web site relevant to New York institutions of higher education.
6. We used email to request help in building the data set.

D3: Digitization

Our data sources were online so some of our work was a cut-and-paste operation, taking from one Web site and placing it into one of our worksheets. The data was coded and represented numerically allowing for statistical analysis. The data set is organized into three spreadsheets—institutions, curriculum, and faculty.

D4: Discovery

This is a descriptive study that sets forth basic empirical parameters of Black Studies as an academic discipline. There are definite findings to be reported, but perhaps more important is that this report will serve as the base for future studies that can add additional variables to the data set, and measure the trends in variables concerning which we now have data over time. Toward that end everyone who reads this study is invited to contribute their criticisms and especially new data. This first report is merely a work in progress until it meets our collective standards for accuracy, clarity, and policy relevance.

D5: Design

This report on New York is part of a larger study, but will be prepared in two main formats. A monograph will present all of the analysis including the empirical tables. This monograph will be posted on the Web site <http://alkalimat.org/eblackstudies> and distributed via email to appropriate lists like H-Afro-Am. The second format will be a journal article that concentrates the findings and integrates them into the general literature.

D6: Dissemination

We will distribute the first draft to all faculty at institutions in New York State for corrections and additions as well as post it to the H-Afro-Am list. A final revised edition will be widely sent out via the Internet. The journal article will be submitted to a refereed journal in Black Studies.

We will also propose discussion of this report in all graduate studies-level programs in New York and throughout the country.

Research note

It is important to contextualize this report. In the recent literature on Africana Studies several distinct research foci can be described.

1. Theoretical/ideological models (e.g. Asante, Karenga, Alkalimat)
2. Anecdotal historical narratives (e.g. Perry, James, Rooks)
3. Archive-based case studies (e.g. Small)
4. Anthologies (e.g. Norment, Azevedo, Aldridge & Young)
5. eBlack Studies Research (e.g. Rojas, Weissinger, Alkalimat)

All of these distinct approaches are making contributions in various ways. However, until now, none have laid a solid empirical foundation for research on the discipline. Our intention is to begin building this as the research data base we need.

Finally, it is important to clarify what is not in this report: (A) Social context–Community, (B) Institutional Context–Campus, (C) Course Enrollments, (D) Course Content, (E) Student Involvement, (F) Faculty Evaluations, (G) Black Cultural Centers, (H) Campus Connection to Africa and the African Diaspora, and (I) Campus Political Culture.

The historical background to Black Studies in New York State

The historical origin of Black Studies in New York goes all the way back to 1796 when the African Free School was opened. Another major contribution was made by the Abolitionist Movement, especially by intellectual giants such as Frederick Douglas, Henry Hyland Garnett, John Brown, and Harriet Tubman. Two twentieth-century high points have been the Harlem Renaissance (1920s) and BeBop (1940s). Black Studies emerged in the 1960s revolution in Black ideology and culture. It was created by student activists acting in concert with community movements as a battlefield for Black power in New York higher education.

Hip Hop emerged in the 1980s and became a global force manifested in multiple forms—Black youth and rap, Latinos and breakin’, and White boys taggin’—though everybody really was doing everything. Hip Hop shot past analog into digital like everything else. Now in the twenty-first century new social forces are breakin’ out as cyber organizers.

Decade	Name of generation	Migrations	Main social forces	Innovations
1920s	Founders	WW II migration from South	Black rural immigrants and middle class	New Negro nationalism of Harlem Renaissance
1940s	Fighters	WW II migration from South	Black workers	Class struggle, Civil Rights, BeBop
1960s	Ideologues	Urban born	Black youth	Black art, Black power, Black studies
1980s	Rappers, agitators	Caribbean	Urban youth	Hiphop
2000s	Cyberorganizers	Diaspora	Everybody	eBlack

Table 3. Innovations in New York Black political culture, 1920s–2000s

A student of Black intellectual history, Harry Green, provides data on African American PhDs up until 1946 (when his study was published). New York has been the context for a great deal of the development of a Black professional elite.

Harlem developed into a Mecca of Black political culture, a public sphere for cultural creativity and political education. A base of operations for intellectual activity in Harlem was the Schomburg library and research center, named after the Afro-Puerto Rican bibliophile, Arturo Schomburg. This became and remains the world’s greatest collection on the African and African American experience under the leadership of its current director, Howard Dodson.

All of the following people lived and worked in Harlem and used the Schomburg as their center of learning and culture about Black people, and in so doing laid the foundation for Black Studies in New York: T. Thomas Fortune (1856–1928), Madame C.J. Walker (1867–1919), W.B. DuBois (1868–1963), Arturo Schomburg (1874–1938), Hubert Harrison (1883–1927), Charles Johnson (1883–1956), J.A. Rogers (1883–1966), Oscar Micheaux (1884–1951), Marcus Garvey (1887–1940), Zora Neale Hurston (1891–1960), Richard Moore (1893–1978), Paul Robeson (1896–1976), Duke Ellington (1899–1974), Langston Hughes (1902–1967), Adam Clayton Powell (1908–1972), Chester Himes (1909–1984), Ollie Harrington (1912–1995), Romare Bearden (1914–1988), Billie Holiday (1915–1959), Charlie Parker (1920–1955), James Baldwin (1924–1987), and Louis Michaux.

During the 1940s, 50s, and 60s, key individuals in social movements emerged that helped to continue the development toward the Black Studies Revolution. Early academics included Kenneth Clark in Psychology (CCNY), John P. Davis in Political Science (CCNY), Hylan Lewis (1911–2000) in Sociology (Brooklyn College), and J. Saunders Redding (1906–1988) in Literature (Cornell University). Early forays into electoral politics included campaigns by Adam Clayton Powell.

One of the unique aspects of Black political culture, especially in New York, is the parallel development and interpenetration of the Black Nationalist Movement and the Communist Movement. The Black Nationalist Movement, rooted in the Garvey UNIA Movement, included key people like Carlos Cooks and the African Pioneer Movement, and a community faculty of street corner speakers representing the Harlem University of Common Sense. The nationalist intellectuals that remained as key figures in the Black Studies Movement included John Henry Clark and Yosef ben-Jochannon. Early spokespersons in the Communist Movement include Benjamin Davis, James Ford, Abner Berry, and Harry Haywood. Herbert Aptheker was a major writer on the African American experience for the Communist Party. The Left also was very active in the Black Arts & Culture projects sponsored by the Federal WPA.

Commercial institutions like book stores were used for building personal book collections. Three of the main book stores were run by Louis Micheaux (National Memorial Bookstore), Richard Moore (Frederic Douglas Bookstore), and Una Mulzak (Liberation Bookstore).

Malcolm X became a prism through which both the nationalist and communist traditions found expression. The speeches of Malcolm X define the ideological moment at the birth of Black Studies. The spontaneous urban rebellions and the Black Community Control Movement define the social forces willing to act on the logic of Malcolm X. Rebellions emerged in the mid-1960s: 1964 Harlem, 1965 Watts, and 1967 Detroit and Newark. The Black Power slogan emerged as Malcolm's legacy. Key figures in New York community struggles included Milton Galamison, Jesse Gray, Bill Epton, Preston Wilcox, Sonny Carson, Al Vann and others. The Black Power militancy expressed itself in the sphere of education through grass roots militant action. In 1964 three militant school boycotts were organized: February, March, and September. Subsequent high points in the struggle for power in the community control of schools movement included the actions at IS201 in Harlem in 1966, and at Ocean-Hill, Brownsville in Brooklyn in 1968.

The rebellions and militant community action led to a new Black awakening, a new application of revolutionary ideas and Black culture. This radicalism had its origin outside of mainstream institutions as the traditions of the Black community became intertwined with radical socialist movements. In terms of culture, while the traditional venue of the Apollo Theatre continued to be utilized, new institutions were formed like the Black Arts Theatre in Harlem by Amiri Baraka and the East Cultural Center in Brooklyn under the leader of Jitu Weusi. Key individuals included Barbara Ann Tier, Larry Neal, Jayne Cortez, Audrey Lorde, Sonia Sanchez, and Harold Cruse. Union theological became a cauldron of Black liberation Theology with people like C.Eric Lincoln, James Cone, Gayraud Wilmore, Cornel West, and Dwight Hopkins. New institutions emerged including the Negro Ensemble Company, the Dance Theatre of Harlem, and the Studio Museum of Harlem, and the National Black Theatre. Preexisting institutions played a role as well.

On the political side, the emergence of Black Power that impacted New York included the Black Panther party, The Young Lords, the Newark Black Power Conference in 1967, and the Third World Women's Alliance under the leadership of Fran Beal and their newspaper Triple Jeopardy. This culminated in the African Liberation Support Committee, the greatest concentration of Black Radicals since the 1930s, drawing members from nationalist movements as well as the Left, including Elombe Brath, Same Anderson, and Bill Sales.

Political culture is reflected in the media. The left media was a great support to early developments, particularly newspapers (especially The Guardian, The Daily World, and The Militant) as well as magazines (The Nation and The Monthly Review). The two key Black publications were Freedom Ways, with its connections to the Left, and The Liberator, with its connections to the Nationalist Movement. Two key media activists have been Gil Noble ("Like it is" ABC TV) and Bob Law (WLIB radio). Three cartoonists were integral to the growth of visual political expression: Gerald 2X in Mohammed Speaks, Emory Douglas in the Black Panther Party Newspaper, and Ollie Harrington in The Daily World.

Students and youth publications included the Columbia University Journal of Black Students, Mojo: Newspaper of the Black Student Congress, Black Dialogue, and Onyx. Today this media presence is represented by Souls (edited by Manning Mirabel at Columbia University), Black Renaissance (edited at New York University by Manthia Diawara), and Afro Americans in New York Life & History (edited by Monroe Fordham at Buffalo State University).

The key turning points for the explosion in the 1960s were the assassinations of the two key leaders, Malcolm X and Martin Luther King. The assassination of Malcolm led to the concentration of his ideological legacy in the slogan "Black Power." Every autobiography written by people active in the 1960s makes some reference to Malcolm, and it is this very reference that locates them on a mapping of Black political culture by identifying them in relationship to the origins of Black Studies. The murder of King in 1968 gave rise to a new development. Because now there were two wounds, a polarity in the treatment of marginalized Black youth came into being. On the one hand the increase in the rate of incarceration and the drug war has destabilized and removed a portion of Black youth from any potential political involvement. On the other hand, society as a whole has embraced another portion of Black youth and brought them into the internal life of institutions, particularly those of higher education.

There was a massive enrollment in institutions of higher education by Blacks in the U.S. after the assassination of Martin Luther King. We began the 1960s with less than 200,000 African Americans in postsecondary education and by the 1970s there were over one million, more than a five-fold increase. The key years were 1968 and 1969, chronicled for example in articles in the New York Times. Struggles were reported in 1968 (New York University, Cornell University, Fordham, Columbia, and CUNY), and in 1969 (Hunter, Stony Brook, CCNY, Vassar, Pratt, and Wells). Each of these campuses has a specific history, with key individuals who were active on those campuses. Altogether, they are part of the same diverse movement that was exploding in this late 1960s period.

There are many key individuals in the history of New York Africana Studies (e.g., James Turner, Barbara Wheeler, Leonard Jeffries, Charshée McIntyre, and others) including people from throughout the African Diaspora (e.g., Alem Habtu, Kamau Braithwaite, Ngugi wa Thiongo, and Chinua Achebe). White scholars have contributed as well (e.g., Herbert Aptheker, Eric Foner, Martin Bernal, and Ron English).

The two main campus struggles were at Columbia and Cornell. Columbia involved both SDS and militant Black students, each of whom seized control of a different part of the Columbia University campus. The Black students took over Hamilton Hall and were protesting the involvement of Columbia in a land takeover in Harlem in order to build a gym which Harlem youth would not be able to use. Cornell University emerged also as a scene of violent confrontation. Now it has the leading department in the state. The fight for Black studies at Cornell is well documented, and the spirit of that movement is kept alive in the research program and the library of the department.

Academic discipline

1. How many institutions grant degrees?

There are 58 institutions of higher education in the State of New York that grant degrees in Africana Studies. Thirty are private and 28 are public.

Adelphi University	Ithaca College
Albany SUNY	John Jay College CUNY
Bard College	Lehman College CUNY

Table 4. New York institutions of higher education which grant academic degrees in Africana Studies

2. What kinds of institutions grant degrees?

	In New York City	Elsewhere in state	Total
Public institutions (CUNY, SUNY)	14	15	29
Private institutions	7	22	29
Total	21	37	58

Table 5. Degree-granting academic units by institution and location

Programs in Africana Studies are offered by both public and private institutions. The greatest geographical concentration is in New York City, in public institutions.

We need a broader analysis of how widespread Africana Studies degree programs are relative to other degree programs throughout the state. Also, the programs in New York City, because of their close proximity to one another, provide an opportunity for intensive comparative case studies, as well as joint programming. There are many institutional and community variables that need to be investigated in order to better understand what social environment is associated with degree programs in Africana Studies. On the one hand there are objective factors: the demographic profile of all aspects of the institution (students, faculty, administration, and Board, as well as the local community), financial and general economic factors, political and other social factors, and historical patterns of institutional innovation. There are also subjective factors embodied in official policy and the consciousness of the key actors in each situation.

3. What are the names of the academic units?

Diaspora-oriented
Africana	23	40%
African American	12	21%
Black	5	9%
African and African American	7	12%
African	1	2%
All Diaspora oriented	48	83%
Other
Ethnic	5	9%
American	2	3%
Multicultural	2	3%
Interdisciplinary	1	2%
All non-Diaspora oriented	10	17%
Total	58	100%

Table 6. Names of academic units

The dominant tendency is the Diaspora model compared to the model that would locate the Black Experience as part of, and limited to, the American Experience. Within the Diaspora model the most popular name is Africana (used by over 40% of the programs). This appears to represent a growing consensus for the ideological/theoretical orientation of the academic discipline in New York.

In this age of globalization Africana Studies is uniquely conceived as a form of Diaspora Studies. Today this is mostly constructed as an additive process, forming a general pattern by aggregating specific building blocks like courses. The challenge is to construct a curriculum, student body, and faculty that reflect the Diaspora and connect the institutions throughout the African Diaspora in interinstitutional cooperation. The door is open to using Distance Learning Technology to unite educational activities throughout the Africana Diaspora—a common curriculum could be offered simultaneously in Africa, the Caribbean, and the Americas. This general orientation of Africana Studies can usefully be compared to the orientation of community institutions like local churches, media, and aspects of local political culture, both historically and currently.

4. What kinds of administrative structures exist?

Department	17	29%
Program	24	41%
Center or institute	7	12%
Other	10	17%
Total	58	100%

Table 7. Administrative structure of academic units

The main two forms are the department and the program. The department structure suggests a formal, permanent, budgetary existence at the highest level or organization of an academic discipline. The program suggests a more peripheral program/unit more likely to be funded with soft money and existing more through policy decision than under statutory requirement.

Research needs to be done to model each of these administrative structures in relationship to their host institution so that we can have a better understanding of where departments need to be built and maintained, and where programs and/or centers and institutes might well be developed and maintained. This kind of modeling will enable us to know to what extent we are maximizing the administrative opportunities on each individual campus without ignoring the ways in which campuses are different. More intensive investigation is needed of the objective differences and similarities of these three types of structures. One aspect focuses on the legal-administrative structure, while another focuses on the functioning processes and programmatic outcomes. Another issue is status, perceived inside the institution by students, faculty, and administration, as well as in the community and throughout the Africana Studies professional network.

5. Does structural security/sustainability exist?

	Public	Private	Total
Department	15	2	17
Program	7	17	24
Center or institute	2	5	7
Other	4	6	10
Total	28	30	58

Table 8. Administrative structure of academic unit, by public and private institution

The key finding is that departments tend to be in public institutions and programs tend to be in private institutions. Africana Studies is on a more secure footing in public institutions in part because they are sensitive to political pressure from the community. However, as programs, centers, and institutes are also likely to be more highly funded they tend to be most prevalent in private institutions.

The social movement phase created Black Studies. This origin has impacted the academic organization of Black Studies by making greater gains in the public arena. After a modeling that will enable us to understand which campuses might well have departments, it will be possible to begin the process of expanding and developing the discipline in this manner. As part of the comparative history of the field it is important to bring to light not only the pattern of the creation and dissolution of degree programs, but also to determine if there is a sequencing of the three forms in terms of growth and development, or decline. The simplistic pattern in the popular media of annually announcing a decline in the field without reliable data needs to be repudiated by continuing the research proposed in this report.

6. What undergraduate degree programs are available?

Master's degree	6	10%
Bachelor's degree (major)	28	48%
Bachelor's degree (minor)	18	31%
Other	6	10%
Total	58	100%

Table 9. Highest degree offered

The dominant tendency is to grant a full undergraduate major in Africana Studies. However, there are also opportunities to earn a minor in the subject as well as an associate of arts degree concentration at the community college level.

This typology of degree programs needs to be understood in relationship to the number of people coming through the degree-granting pipeline. The following table presents data from 2002-2003 on the number of Blacks earning degrees in Ethnic Studies in Africana Studies. It is interesting to note that six of the nine schools are in New York City.

Albany SUNY	21

7. Is graduate study available?

Institution	Type	Degree	Thesis	Exam
Albany SUNY	Public	MA in Africana Studies	No	Yes
Graduate Center CUNY	Public	PhD concentration in Africana Studies	No	No
Columbia University	Private	MA in African American Studies	Yes	No
Cornell University	Private	MA in Africana Studies	Yes	Yes
New York University	Private	MA in Africana Studies	Optional	No

Table 11. Graduate programs

It is possible to get a MA degree in Africana Studies and these programs are located in the main PhD-granting institutions in the state. Two institutions are public, and four are private. There is some variation in the requirements for each degree.

The existence of graduate programs provides an opportunity for careful examination of the nature of the discipline, as the training of professionals has some bearing on their subsequent career trajectories. So one of the great opportunities that exists in the state of New York is for the directors of graduate study in each instance to engage in a common discourse both about the nature of the field as well as the potential job market for graduates. Such a discourse would include activities to foster legitimacy and networking possibilities on a statewide if not national basis. One major follow-up study could create a data base of all topics of MA theses, including title, and abstract if not a full text. Another aspect is to follow the careers of the graduates, as their experience is one way to measure the value of the degree.

8. What is the mission of Africana Studies?

A close reading of the available mission statements of the academic units confirms that the general mission of Africana Studies continues to be the dual values of academic excellence and social responsibility.

The mission of Africana Studies is a topic that requires constant dialogue and evaluation involving all of the major constituencies that include the campus and the community. It would be very interesting to not only have a discussion between the main campuses but with broader community involvement as well toward the possibility of having one mission statement adopted by the vast majority of schools in the state.

9. What is the current level of curriculum standardization?

	Courses	Schools	As percent of all schools
Women	127	46	79%
Activism or social change	133	40	69%
Introductory courses	77	35	60%
Research	31	20	34%
Theory	19	12	21%
Senior seminar	15	12	21%

Table 12. Key areas within the curriculum

Yes, there are three content areas that are present in the curriculum of the majority of the degree-granting programs. This study does not consider the content or quality of these courses, but is simply conducting an analysis of the names of the courses. Obviously this is but the first step toward understanding how these content areas are alive in the educational process of the programs. Indeed, one need also focus on the alliance between the Africana Studies Program and the Women and Gender Studies Program in each instance, as well as the linkage between the campus and the community, including not only courses in research but also projects involving work study and service learning. The activist/change content combines a focus on the general processes of change as well as the agency of the Black Liberation Movement. The subtext is that the major narrative of the Black experience is the march toward freedom.

The foundation of standardization is the introductory course to the discipline. If there is one aspect of Africana Studies that requires attention by all degree-granting programs, it is the introductory course. The coherence of the discipline requires a constant discussion to increase and maintain a consensus about what should be included in the introductory course.

Yes, there are three, explicitly academic areas, that only a minority of degree-granting programs include in their curriculums. While clearly this may be a matter of how courses are named and not one of actual course content, it does seem that a student examining the curriculum would think that these options do not seem to exist. Research methods are not only formal training for research but also provide students with a solid foundation for a life-long journey of gathering and analyzing data for all occupations as well as one's personal and community life. It guarantees an empirical basis for the discipline. Without it a democratic consensus cannot be built; moreover, in its absence ideology based on the assumptions of a few may come to serve as the discipline's foundation.

More rigorous work is needed both on Black intellectual history on the one hand, and on the development of clear theoretical thinking on the other. In other words we have to conceptualize a curriculum for teaching both the history of ideas as well as how to study and develop new abstract ideas in the context of the discipline. Also, it is important to have a clear, capstone course for advanced students in the field. All too often students take classes that are composed primarily of people who are interested in Africana Studies but who take those classes simply as electives. The senior seminar, or the capstone course, is at least one opportunity for students to sit with their fellow majors and minors and have more intense and focused discussions on a higher level.

On the other hand it is interesting that two schools require a senior thesis. This is important because all of these courses provide a link between an undergraduate degree and going to graduate school. The main point is that these three areas of concentration are necessary for academic excellence in our discipline.

10. What languages are studied?

	Courses	Schools	As percent of all schools
Kiswahili	29	8	14%
Arabic	11	3	5%
Yoruba	9	2	3%
Traditional languages	49	10	17%
French	15	10	17%
Spanish	9	5	9%
English	6	5	9%
Colonial/diasporan languages	30	15	26%
Other linguistics or literature courses	9	8	14%
Total	86	23	40%

Note: Subtotals may not add because some schools teach multiple languages and some courses cover more than one language

Table 13. Courses teaching languages, linguistics, or literatures

There are two types of language study in the New York State Africana Studies curriculum. There are traditional African languages and languages of the African Diaspora. KiSwahili (East Africa) is taught most often as a traditional language, along with Arabic (North Africa) and Yoruba (West Africa). French and Spanish are the languages of the African Diaspora, specifically countries like Haiti, Dominican Republic, and Puerto Rico.

The non-English-speaking countries and regions mentioned in these courses include Puerto Rico, Senegal, the Caribbean, West Africa, Afro-Antillean, Asia, Latin America, and the Maghreb. One of the interesting questions in the academic study of language is the distinction between choosing a language to engage in discourse at the national level in these countries and in the global arena, and choosing a language to do specific research in specific countries. In this case, these languages, Arabic, Kiswahili, and Yoruba are widely spoken languages that enable one to engage in discourse over a wide range of Africa: North, East, and West, respectively. More research is needed to determine how much these are languages are taught for identity (cultural experience to ground one in an African context) or utility (using language for experimental purposes, research, or residence in that language community).

Based on digital forms of communications technology our students can be connected in real time to all of the language environments of the African Diaspora. It is important to experiment with multilingual virtual environments that can unite participants all over the world.

11. Are there courses on Latinos?

	Courses	Schools	As percent of all schools
Puerto Rico	29	3	5%
Brazil	6	4	7%
Dominican Republic	5	3	5%
Country Names	40	8	14%
Latino	15	5	9%
Latin America	11	10	17%
Hispanic	4	3	5%
The Americas	2	2	3%
Regional Names	32	14	24%
Other	6	4	7%
Total	78	21	36%

Note: Subtotals may not add because some schools teach in more than one category

Table 14. Courses with names indicating Latino content

Yes, there are 32 courses with titles that indicate a focus on Latino culture as a whole and 40 courses whose titles reference specific countries. These make up the vast majority of the 78 courses taught overall. These courses are offered at 21 schools, 36% of the total. It is worth noting that 82% of these courses are offered by public institutions.

The most common country of study is Puerto Rico; more general orientations to the discipline utilize terms that unite people from the Western hemisphere. The Latino focus has been achieved in public institutions more often than in private institutions.

Four programs have names that link them to the Latino Experience.

This is a critical issue as there are two dominant languages in North, Central, and South America, English and Spanish. The African Diaspora encompasses all of these regions. The teaching of Spanish from a Black perspective would be an interesting multicultural experiment.

Using the tools of distance learning technology it would be possible to work closely with colleagues at institutions in these countries and coordinate some curriculum efforts.

Program	Institution
Black and Hispanic Studies	Baruch College CUNY
Africana and Latin American Studies	Colgate University
Department of Black and Puerto Rican Studies	Hunter College CUNY
Department of Africana and Latino Studies	Oneonta SUNY

Table 15. Latino-related names of academic units

The largest urban communities of color in the U.S. are African Americans and Latinos, and on the East Coast the Afro-Latino connection is strong, based on the Caribbean being part of the African Diaspora. Throughout the Americas, however, the language of the African Diaspora is more likely to be Spanish or Portuguese than English.

12. Are any individuals studied?

Malcolm X	5
Martin Luther King, Jr.	4
Toni Morrison	4
Alice Walker	3
Ralph Ellison	2
Other individuals, one course each	11
Total	25

Note: Total does not sum because courses mention more than one individual.

Table 16. Courses on individuals

There are 25 courses in which an individual's name is mentioned in the title. Of the individuals whose names are mentioned more than once, it is very interesting to see on the one hand the great gains made in the study of key figures from the struggles of the 1960s (Malcolm & King) and on the other the focus on key literary figures (Toni Morrison, Alice Walker, and Ralph Ellison) that has emerged more recently.

Part of the challenge of using an individual as a point of focus for undergraduate study is that the biographical and critical work summing up their life and their achievements, especially the documentation associated with their work, is quite daunting. A great deal of work remains to be done, even with regard to the study of the towering figures of Malcolm and King.

13. What ranks are held by the faculty?

Professor	110	31%
Associate professor	117	33%
Assistant professor	83	23%
Lecturer	14	4%
Adjunct of any rank	11	3%
Visiting of any rank	10	3%
Other	12	3%
Total	357	100%

Note: Rank was not available for an additional 64 individuals of the 421 identified as Africana Studies faculty in New York.

Two-thirds of the faculty appears to be tenured and 87% appear to be on tenure-track lines. A more detailed analysis needs to be done particularly regarding the future retirement rates of the full professor and associate professor ranks. This is a key factor in determining what new job opportunities will be available as well as determining the extent to which programs will tend to expand or contract, both in absolute numbers as well as in rank. We need to be able to distinguish between a net decline in positions overall and a decline in tenured positions that may be accompanied by an increase or a decline in non-tenured positions.

14. What are the academic qualifications of the faculty?

PhD, EdD, DSW, DMus, DMA.	257	88%
Master's degrees other than MFA	16	5%
MFA	7	2%
JD	3	1%
Other	9	3%
Total	292	100%

Note: Highest degree obtained was not available for an additional 129 individuals of the 421 identified as Africana Studies faculty in New York.

Table 18. Highest degrees obtained by faculty

88% of the faculty have PhD degrees. While some of the MAs are terminal MAs in the area of fine arts, it is important to find out what the rate of success for completion of the degree is when faculty are hired ABD.

15. What are their areas of specialization?

History	58
English	27
Literature	19
Humanities	104
Political Science	28
Sociology	27
Anthropology	26
Economics	12
Psychology	11
Social Sciences	104
Other	143
Total	351

Note: Discipline was not available for an additional 61 individuals of the 421 identified as Africana Studies faculty in New York.

Table 19. Disciplinary background of faculty

Based on these areas of specialization, there appears to be a fairly even balance between the humanities and social sciences as well as within the humanities and social sciences except that history is clearly the most popular field.

There were 67 different majors for the faculty. This relative diversity leads to the question of whether or not or to what extent these disciplinary origins can be fused into a sustainable and coherent academic discipline, given pre-existing differences in theory and language? What about research methods?

16. Does gender equality exist?

	Men faculty (N = 193)	Women faculty (N = 142)
Professor	41%	18%
Associate professor	30%	37%
Assistant professor	17%	30%
Lecturer	4%	4%
Adjunct of any rank	4%	3%
Visiting of any rank	2%	4%
Other	3%	3%
Total	100%	100%

Note: Gender and/or rank was not available for an additional 77 individuals of the 421 identified as Africana Studies faculty in New York.

Table 20. Faculty rank, by gender

Of the 386 faculty for whom gender can be estimated by examining first names, 61% are male, 39% female. On the surface this appears as somewhat close to equality. But looking at the gender differences by faculty rank, men are almost three times more likely to be full professors. Women are much more likely to be assistant professor and visiting faculty. The general finding is women are being hired but have not yet achieved ranks comparable to men.

17. Who are the leaders of these academic programs?

	Male	Female	Total
Chair, co-chair, director, coordinator, or advisor	25	25	50

Note: Leadership was not available for an additional 8 academic units.

Table 21. Leaders of academic units, by gender

Women have more equality as leaders of the programs than in their general representation in the faculty overall. It is important to understand the extent to which Africana Studies is an open and democratic environment in which fairness is balanced with the necessary focus on achievement. It is the general goal of gender equality that serves as a standard and therefore is the basis for ongoing policy considerations.

Conclusion

This study describes empirical data about Africana Studies in the State of New York. It is the beginning of a process, and not a definitive study. The only way that it can be definitive is for the faculty and students in New York to correct the data set and add their rich experience to it. For now it stands as the best data set available.

The main conclusion is that Africana Studies in New York has emerged as a solid academic discipline. There is a diverse curriculum, an outstanding faculty, and a general theoretical/ideological consensus.

Sources

This list of sources is in three parts. The first part is a chronological listing of newspaper coverage of Africana/Black Studies from 1968-2003. The second part is a selection of articles and books that represent Black intellectual history of New York and studies on the Black Studies Movement that began in the late 1960s. The third part is a webliography, a listing of relevant Web sites.
