In Retrospect:

FESTAC '77

THOUSANDS OF AFRICANS and persons of African descent converged upon Lagos, Nigeria, during the period 15 January–12 February 1977 to participate in a mammoth festival of arts and culture. Called FESTAC, this Second World Black and African Festival of Arts and Culture followed upon the first—which was staged in Dakar, Senegal—by eleven years. During the intervening years since 1966, most of black Africa had freed itself from the shackles of colonialism, and each of the proud African nations sent to Lagos its best artists, writers, and scholars, there to perform and to interact with one another and with those of the Africa Diaspora.

After the spectacular opening-day ceremonies, each day brought a continuous round of events, beginning as early as 9:00 a.m. and lasting until midnight or later. These included such diverse activities as concerts, ballet, drama, films, poetry readings, lectures, and fashion shows, which were enacted in four “venues”—the new national theater, the national stadium, Tafawa Balewa Square, and Lagos City Hall. In addition, the Festival included numerous exhibitions of painting and sculpture, of books, crafts, science and technology, etc. Among the spectacular attractions were the three-day Regatta—involving more than 200 boats and hundreds of dancers, boatmen, and warriors on Victoria Lake in Lagos—and a two-day Durbar, performed in northern Nigeria at Kaduna by 400 or more horsemen and camel riders.

Nigeria had stated that the “heart” of the Festival would be the Colloquium, and this proved to be true. For two weeks, 17-30 January, more than 200 of the leading black scholars of the world gathered each day to read papers, engage in debate, and prepare reports on the following themes: (1) Arts and Pedagogy, (2) Languages and Literature, (3) Philosophy and Religion, (4) Historical Awareness, and (5) Science and Technology. The principle objectives of the Festival were to provide a forum for the focusing of attention on the enormous richness and diversity of African contributions to world culture and the “opportunity for recounting the achievements of [their] ancestors” (quoted from Lt.-General Olusegun Obasanjo, Head of the Federal Military Government and Patron of FESTAC, in Africa, No. 65 [January 1977], p. 6 FESTAC). Certainly the Festival attained its goals! One observer said, “There is now renewed hope. The essential thing is that black people have been brought together; no one will leave here and not think seriously about important questions. This cultural festival has made us aware, and given us the opportunity to design a functional agenda for finishing up the century."

Nigeria left no stone unturned to insure that the celebration should be a success. There were about 1700 participants, according to a press release, representing some sixty nations, and all were "guests" of the government. Nigeria spent over three billion dollars to stage the festival and to provide for its guests lodging, food, entertainment, transportation, and every other conceivable comfort. Special "festival villages" were built in Lagos and Kaduna to house the performers, and hotels were taken over for the scholars and visiting dignitaries.

For musicians, the highlights of FESTAC '77 were the numerous concerts and a music meeting held on 29 January 1977 under the leadership of Akin Euba (University of Ife, Nigeria), Director of Music Events for Nigeria's participation in FESTAC. Among the university professors of music present were Samuel Akpobot (University of Lagos, Nigeria), Abdourahmane Diop (Conservatory of Music and Art, Dakar, Senegal), Ian Hall (University of London), S. Mbari Katana (Makerere University, Uganda), Paul Kavya (University of Nairobi, Kenya), Mwesa Mapoma (University of Zambia), J. Kwabena Nketia (University of Ghana), Mosunmola Omibiyi (University of Lagos, Nigeria), Jean Joseph Rang (University of Abidjan, Ivory Coast), and Eileen Southern (Harvard University, USA). Others present included Fotu Denton (Director, Lagos State Ministry of Education—Art and Culture), Toronaiko Arnault (Director, Ministry of Art and Culture, Madagascar), instrumentalists, singers, public school teachers, and graduate students of music. After calling the meeting to order and explaining its purpose, Professor Euba asked Professor Nketia to serve as chairman. For more than two hours the international gathering of musicians and musicologists discussed matters of mutual concern and explored ways of improving musical activities among Africans, both on the continent and of the Diaspora. Simultaneous translation into French/English was provided for the benefit of those present who spoke only one language.
